Lochwood-Lozier Custom Homes

With their 30th wedding anniversary approaching, the owner knew he had to do something special for his wife. When the opportunity arose to purchase a home on the island, he knew he had to take advantage. However, the 1950's structure appeared as a jumble of disjointed spaces and outdated aesthetics.

The primary objective was to give this abode a completely new appearance while maximizing views of the coastlines and bringing in as much natural light as possible.

The new design would include a higher pitched roof, a spacious outdoor area, large glass walls, and an updated interior. What the family craved most was a sense of togetherness in a space where they can gather to relax, explore, and bond closer.

Because of this, the team planned for an outdoor covered structure that would be used to increase their enjoyment of the surrounding nature during all seasons.
